Wolfgang Puck fights animal cruelty

LOS ANGELES, March 22

Famed Los Angeles chef and restaurant owner Wolfgang Puck announced he is joining with the Humane Society of the United States to fight animal cruelty.

Puck said the new program will mean the end of foie gras -- a dish created from the livers of overfed ducks and geese -- at his 15 restaurants, the Los Angeles Times reported Thursday.

The program also means all meat and eggs from shackled or caged animals would be banned from his restaurants.

However, Puck will continue using skate and Russian caviar and lobsters will still be cut in half while alive at his restaurants.

"We have to take a stand, to let people know what we believe," Puck said. "We have always looked for products from cage-free animals. Generally, this is for better-quality ingredients. Now we will police our purveyors to make certain that they give it to us."

The program follows three years of protests against Puck by animal-rights group Farm Sanctuary. Puck denied the protests had anything to do with the change in his menus.

Animals’ Angels inspectors visit the auction located in Greencastle, PA. The auction is very busy due to Easter. Hundreds of goats and sheep are there for sale.

On February 28th, Animals’ Angels USA informed the Senators and Congressmen about the results of the recent horse slaughter investigation in the United States and Mexico and handed out a report detailing all of the evidence uncovered during the investigation.

The Animals’ Angels inspectors visit John Morrell and Co. in Sioux Falls, South Dakota. John Morrell owns numerous kill plants – at least 6. This facility processes cull sows and market-size pigs.

The Council Animal Advocacy (CLAW) have incorporated most issues or causes into three (3) major “Programs”, aptly titled:

A. Project Protection of Animals – primarily devoted to Domestic Animals, Pets, Rodeo venues, Exotic or Wild Animals Schedule “A”

B. The Wholesome & Humane Program – primarily devoted to Animals raised for Food, Safe & Wholesome foods, Abattoirs, Livestock Transport, Standards for each species of Animal (ie; anti-biotics in animal production, genetically altered foods, Fish Farms, etc.)

C. Fines & Penalty Program – proposed progressive fines (ie; warning, 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th offence fines) and penalties, including community service, impoundment, elec. monitoring, incarceration for corresponding violations to Legislation or Bylaws
Violence against livestock farmers condemned by CSIF

Posted: 1/23/2007 9:32:37 AM

CSIF News Release

DES MOINES, IA – January 23, 2007 – Dead cattle, a torched machine shed, vandalized feed equipment and the suspicious loss of a 370-head nursery building to fire have investigators searching for answers. They also represent a growing trend of violence directed toward families interested in growing their livestock farms ...

“Farm families who raise livestock are reporting increased incidences of violence directed toward them, their family members and property,” said Bruce Berven, executive vice president of the Iowa Cattlemen’s Association and CSIF board member.

Activists Focus on Farm Animal Transportation

Cruel Animal Transport - October 2006 Update
The Twenty-Eight Hour Law is a federal law that went into effect in 1873. It requires that, for every 28 hours of transport, farm animals should be offloaded from vehicles and given at least five hours of rest, accompanied by food and water...

Farm Sanctuary and other humane groups, including HSUS, COK and Animals' Angels, jointly filed a petition on October 4, 2005 with the USDA, asking that they honor the original intentions of the Twenty-Eight Hour Law by issuing regulations to include farm animal transportation via trucks. Otherwise, the law is useless at giving a modicum of protection and relief to farm animals, many of whom suffer their entire lives on factory farms.

In some instances, transport trucks are so poorly designed that animals can even fall out.

Animal Protection Organizations Petition USDA To Limit Long-Distance Trucking Of Animals

10/04/2005
WASHINGTON – The Humane Society of the United States, Farm Sanctuary, Compassion Over Killing, and Animals' Angels—animal advocacy organizations representing more than 9 million members and constituents—today filed a legal petition calling on the U.S. Department of Agriculture to amend its regulations to limit truck transport of animals to no more than 28 hours, as required by the federal "Twenty-Eight Hour Law." Although 95 percent of all animals transported in the United States are shipped by truck, the USDA's regulations implementing the Act only apply to transport by train.
“To provide international leadership in animal welfare through the development of science-based standards and guidelines, the provision of expert advice and the promotion of relevant education and research.”

Balzar also acknowledged the Humane Society and associated groups have taken on the tactic of attacking livestock production practices such as gestation crates for sows in states with little actual hog production. Voters in Florida and Arizona have banned such crates and now there is legislation in Oregon, a state that has fewer than 1,500 total sows.

"Is your criticism fair? Maybe," Balzar said. "Do you start out in the ring with the bigger guy, or do you start out with the little guy?" (John Balzar, Sr. VP Communications, HSUS)

How will the passage of Proposition 204 this past November affect large pork producers like Pigs for Farmer John (PFFJ)?

A subsidiary of the Austin, Minn., based Hormel Company, PFFJ has a farm just north of Snowflake, as well as farms in California and Wyoming. The PFFJ farm north of Snowflake is home to approximately 130,000 to 140,000 hogs. About 10 percent of the total population, or roughly 13,500 animals, are breeding sows and the remaining 90 percent are the offspring of the breeding sows. The offspring are kept and raised in group pens that vary by weight and age until they reach market weight around 265 lbs. Then they are sent to slaughter to produce fresh pork. PFFJ markets approximately 250,000 hogs annually.

It will cost PFFJ approximately $1.5 million to retrofit the farm. The animal handlers will also need to be retrained, as the farm's animal handlers are a key component in each animal's care and comfort.

Egg Farmers Clucking at Cage Ban
by KEN DIXON
03/10/2007

HARTFORD - Connecticut egg farmers warned Friday that they could be put out of business if state lawmakers ban cages for hens.

The legislation would also prohibit the state Department of Administrative Services from buying eggs from farms that use cages. "There's virtually no commercial cage-free layer production in Connecticut," Prelli said.

Connecticut ranks 29th in the nation for egg production.
Widespread Abuse of U.S. Farmed Animals Exposed

Investigation of farmed animal transport reveals video evidence of shocking cruelty and lack of legal protection

Sacramento, CA - The Animal Protection Institute (API) and Compassion in World Farming (CIWF) today released the results of a landmark investigation into the transport of live farmed animals throughout the United States, uncovering horrible conditions and long periods of grueling travel. The investigation documented the transport of live cows within the U.S. and the transport of pigs from the U.S. to Mexican slaughterhouses.

What is the Animal Agriculture Alliance Doing?
How the Animal Ag Alliance is Helping Counter Activist Campaigns

- Coordinating Industry Coalitions to Take Action
  - Facilitated Development of Animal Welfare Guidelines for all species
  - National Coordinator for Industry Input to USDA/OIE on AW
  - National Coalition Addressing Pew NCIFAP

- Monitors animal rights groups’ activities & legislative initiatives

- Provides accurate & timely information to allies in the food chain on food animal welfare issues

- Hosts a national list serve for members to allow immediate reporting on legislation & campaigns

- Educates media on key AW issues; info resource
How the Animal Ag Alliance is Helping Counter Activist Campaigns

- Provides national public opinion research on consumers' views about the animal ag & food industries, animal rights activists

- Provides Tools & Talking Points to Address Issues
  - AW programs brochure
  - Website

- Hosts events to bring Stakeholders together to better understand issues:
  - Annual Stakeholders Summit on animal welfare;
  - Planning a Food Chain Roundtable Forum

- Facilitates Anti-Terrorism Training workshops
What Can You Do?
What You Can Do

- Talk to your customers, legislators, employees - get involved
- Develop or work with customers to develop transportation guidelines, training programs & certification programs for employees on AW handling & company policies
- Beware of offers from animal activist groups to “work together”
- Develop & implement security/anti-terrorism plan, including strict hiring procedures
- Develop crisis management procedures, including a communications plan; become media trained
- Strengthen state & local laws and penalties against AR violence, vandalism, intimidation, & extortion
What You Can Do

- Lobby for laws to require activist groups pay legal expenses if charges are proven to be false
- Review state laws re: ballot initiatives or referendums
  Think outside the box – do these restrictions on business/trade qualify as “a taking”?
- Be Proactive - Seek innovative solutions to the major issues raised
- Lobby Against initiatives to replace animal owner w/ “guardian”
- Develop/Join an industry-wide coalition in your state & community; Join the Animal Ag Alliance
